The Sierra Nevada Alliance celebrated its eighth year of working to protect the Sierra with a conference and field trips in Yosemite that highlighted the complexity of collaboration and conflict, the benefits of watershed restoration, and the transportation and land use impacts of increasing population growth. Heady stuff for a room full of people concerned with the future of the Sierra!

And we celebrated the successes of the past year, launching the Sierra Land Trust Council through its first annual rendezvous, and working with state watershed interests to create a statewide network of watershed groups, called the California Watershed Network. Although the Sierra provides 65% of the drinking water to the state, there is not yet the understanding in the state that the headwaters need help with stewarding and restoring those headwaters. And the Sierra needs a statewide support system, because only through a state network can we develop the political leverage to get the Sierra’s fair share of restoration funds.

Supporting our Member Groups

Eight years ago, when we started the Alliance, we had a list of the known grassroots groups working in the Sierra, and the list totaled forty. Today, the Alliance is host to eighty member groups working to protect and maintain the many Sierra natural resources that make up our ecosystem. The great growth in new groups speaks volumes about the passion of the people who live in the Sierra - those with a firm commitment to protect the places that are important to them, and that are important to the fabric of the Sierra itself. We are very fortunate that there are thousands of people who are dedicated to the future of John Muir’s Range of Light. The member groups are truly the heart and soul of the Alliance.

Protecting and Restoring Watersheds

The Alliance chose well when we decided to focus our rangewide program on watersheds - because watershed health and restoration touches on all aspects of the Sierra’s ecosystems and its human communities. We know from countless stories up and down the Sierra that watersheds are a magnet for communities to come together and work on a resource issue that touches their hearts. We have been very successful in promoting, nurturing and helping local watershed groups, and our work at the state level has brought millions in restoration funds to Sierra watersheds. Much of this money is just beginning to get through the state contracting process and into projects that will benefit our communities and our environment.

Roads and Highways

As more people move to the Sierra or come to play for a day or week, we see our local roads and highways become increasingly busy. And CalTrans proposes those age-old, but temporary, solutions of adding new road lanes, building bypasses or overpasses, and installing signal lights that change our image and impinge on our rural senses. No one knows what the future looks like for transportation and there is no plan for the Sierra, so we endorse engineering solutions that damage our watersheds, communities and scenic views. The Alliance is exploring a new way to look at transportation issues in the Sierra - we believe that the Sierra deserves a more thoughtful approach to design and construction of roads and highways.

Transition Time

And, as changes come to everything, after eight very interesting, exciting, demanding, fun, and successful years, I will be easing out of the Alliance. As one of a large group of founders, I have been strengthened by my close association with this vibrant and effective group, yet had no understanding in 1993 that I would work so hard for so long! Its time to slow down, and I leave knowing that the Alliance is a well-established force for protecting the Sierra’s awe-inspiring streams, mountains, foothills, trails, valleys, and its communities.
